Modernization, Neoliberal Globalization or Variegated Development: The Indian Food System Transformation in Comparative Perspective

Abstract: The lecture reviews three theoretical approaches to agro-food system change, placed at different levels on the ladder of generality. It then considers these approaches in relation to India's changing agro-food system. Finally, it examines the general and the particularistic features of the Indian case, and discusses their implications for theories relating to global governance and international political economy.
